Trinity Policy Journal
Volume III

Pressure & Possibility

Theme:
Pressure and Possibility

Today’s world presents pressure on multiple fronts simultaneously: a warming climate, economic precarity, strained public services, fragile democracies, and rapid technological change. Pressure can do more than hold things back. It can also reveal parts where institutions fail, bring unanswered questions into the open, and create new ideas. Whether pressure is a crisis or opportunity is often unclear in social policy. How we answer this depends on who holds power, whose voice is heard, and whose futures become a reality.

In its third volume, the Trinity Policy Journal invites contributions that analyse the relationship between pressure and possibility: how systems respond to conflict, where resistance emerges and mobilisation occurs, and what forms of change are possible. We encourage submissions from all disciplines and across global contexts.

What we are looking for: Articles

Article submissions can come from undergraduate or postgraduate coursework, extracurricular activities, and personal endeavours. This may further include co-authorship, where applicable and upon consent or coordination of each author. Along with your paper, please submit a 200 to 300 word abstract. If applicable, specify in the abstract if there are images (photography or other forms of art) in your article. The submissions must meet the following guidelines:

- The paper must range from 1500 to 3500 words – excluding references,
- It must include the full bibliography,
- It must follow Harvard citation guidelines and
- Submissions must be a Microsoft Word document.

What we are looking for: Reviews

We welcome review submissions on academic works, books, film/tv, and music. Along with your review, please submit a 100 to 200 word abstract. The submissions must meet the following guidelines:

- The review must range from 1000 to 2000 words – excluding references,
- It must include the full bibliography,
- It must follow Harvard citation guidelines and
- Submissions must be a Microsoft Word document.

You may submit up to two submissions; however, only one will be selected by the board.

All submissions need to conform to Harvard citation style. PDF submissions will NOT be accepted.

How to Submit:

Please send your submissions to trinitypolicyjournal@gmail.com by 11:59pm GMT on Monday, February 1st, 2027.

Please email trinitypolicyjournal@gmail.com if you have any questions ahead of the submission deadline.
